Hola! Anh Does Brazil

With the 2014 FIFA World Cup underway and the Rio Olympics just two years away, see Brazil through the eyes of Australian comedian and best-selling author Anh Do in ANH DOES BRAZIL.

From Rio to the Amazon and Salvador to São Paulo, Anh brings us his unique take on the people, cuisine, customs and culture of modern-day Brazil in two brand new television specials, premiering next month on Seven.

As always, Anh throws himself into the action and this adventure could be his craziest yet.

The self-confessed “bad dancer” finds himself shaking his groove thing on top of a Carnival float in front of 200,000 people. In the Amazon jungle, he wrestles a five metre anaconda and goes fishing for the deadly piranha.

Anh tries the indigenous sport of rock surfing, goes on a muster with cowboys and lends a hand to rescue endangered baby turtles.

He talks to the locals preserving their diverse culture and protecting nature under threat. But it’s meeting children learning classical music in a dangerous favela that brings the Aussie funnyman to tears.

“Brazilians have a zest for life that is absolutely contagious and their country is spectacular and untamed,” said Anh. “This trip was just wild. One of my favourites for sure.”

ANH DOES BRAZIL is the latest in a series of Anh Do specials produced in-house by Seven Productions. Paul Melville is Director and Executive Producer.
