Beachley joins Beach Cops

Seven-time world surfing champion Layne Beachley to present new series about the police who work the Northern Beaches beat.

Layne Beachley will narrate Seven's new factual series, BEACH COPS, which follows the police men and women who operate along Sydney's Northern Beaches.

From driving offences to missing persons to drugs, see how the officers respond to the dangerous, tragic and often funny situations that are part of their everyday lives through Summer, when this stunning stretch of coastline, from Manly to Palm Beach, swells by seven million visitors.

Layne grew up perfecting her craft at Manly Beach and remains a proud Northern Beaches resident to this day, making her a natural fit for BEACH COPS.

"Having grown up in the area, I have seen all there is to see," she says. "But Beach Cops has given me a healthy perspective on just how hard the police work to keep the community safe".

BEACH COPS premieres October on Seven. The series is produced in-house by Seven Productions. Lyndal Marks is Executive Producer.

Layne is widely regarded as the most successful female surfer in history. She paved the way for women's surfing and has been applauded for providing service and support to the sport, as well as different communities, charities and boards. She is the founder and director of the Aim For The Stars Foundation which provides financial and moral support for girls and women across Australia to invest in their future and fulfil their potential in academia, the arts, business, music and sport. In 2015, Layne was appointed an Officer of the Order of Australia (AO) for her outstanding achievements and service.
